Serials Para Eset Nod32 ^HOT^

I can't really understand what's going on here and can't get it to work with the unserialize() method as mentioned in the documentation. What am I doing wrong and how can I solve this? A: The serialize() function is expecting an object. Your input is a string, not an object. serialize() looks like this: public function serialize($data) { if (is_array($data)) { return serialize($data); } elseif (is_object($data)) { return serialize((array)$data); } else { return serialize($data); } } So you need to call it by unserialize($data). Try this: $content = file_get_contents('data.txt'); $dato = unserialize($content); var_dump($dato); Update If you're certain that you're serializing your object, you should try this: file_put_contents('data.txt', serialize($dato), FILE_APPEND); A prototype is a preliminary model of something. Projects that offer physical products need to show backers documentation of a working prototype. This gallery features photos, videos, and other visual documentation that will give backers a sense of what's been accomplished so far and what's left to do. Though the development process can vary for each project, these are the stages we typically see: Once we have reached the prototype phase of the project, we will be offering the first units to qualified backers. The first 99 applications will be handled in the first order. If the first phase is successful, the production will be distributed in a second phase. We are very proud to announce our latest and most advanced product for law enforcement, INTERPOL UH-1 Huey. It's a working prototype of an all-terrain vehicle (ATV). We developed this craft for dealing with SWAT and riot situations. Interpol's UH-1 Huey is a 4-wheel ATV that can be used in places where any other vehicle is not permitted. It's designed to be fast, responsive and powerful.
